Harvest

Today we celebrate harvest, as many generations before us have done at St. Peter's. In years gone by harvest may have felt more significant than it does to us today, as people lived in closer harmony with the natural cycle of the seasons, with daily life and work being reliant upon sun and rain, light and darkness. Now, and in the centre of Derby, we might question what harvest means when most of us have no real connections to the agricultural world. As we walk round the local supermarket – at any time of year – harvest seems to be a year-long, rather than a seasonal, event. The choice and abundance of food that marks our modern urban lifestyle in the Western world, not to mention the amount of food we throw away, removes us from the experiences of earlier faith communities who, for centuries, offered the first fruits of their harvests to their gods in gratitude for all they had received. Perhaps harvest is more important than ever, a vital reminder of our dependence upon the earth and its produce, and those who farm it.

At harvest we give thanks – and it is right and good to do so. As the mediaeval mystic, Meister Eckhart, once said, 'If the only prayer you ever say in your entire life is 'thank you', it will be enough. But real thanksgiving has to result in practical outcomes. One of these is the recognition that we, and our interests and needs, do not lie at the centre of the universe, but that we have responsibilities towards our planet and those we share it with, not least those who have little or no harvest – of any description – to celebrate. The gratitude we offer as we celebrate can't complacently thank God that we are well provided for, when we know that vast numbers of people around our world struggle to survive, suffering and dying each day because of hunger, thirst, injustice and inequality.

So today – and every day – we are called to thank God. Because living a life based on gratitude, rather than one which constantly complains that nothing is ever right, can make all the difference. But our gratitude needs to be more than just words. It needs to move our consciences, our actions and the choices we make, and take seriously the challenge to live more simply, more fairly, more sustainably and more harmoniously with both the creator and creation..

With my prayers and love,

Anita

Praying for the Persecuted Church: China

China's growing Christian community currently stands at around 97.2 million – just under seven per cent of the country's total population. The church in China continues to see extraordinary growth, but in recent years has seen an increase in persecution.

The policy of 'sinicising' the church (to make Chinese) is implemented across the country as the Communist Party relies strongly on Chinese cultural identity to stay in power, and limits whatever could threaten its control on society. New restrictions on the internet, social media and non-governmental organisations – along with a revision of religious regulation in 2018 which was enhanced again last year – are strictly applied and seriously limit freedom. Churches are being monitored and closed, be they independent or affiliated to the state (e.g. Three-Self Patriotic Movement). On a more local level, converts from Islam or Buddhism whose new faith is discovered by family and the community are likely to face threats and physical harm.

Grace – whose name we've change to protect her identity – is a gentle sister in her late 40s. She is a Han Chinese Christian. Her story demonstrates that there is no sphere of life that the Chinese state will not seek to exert its control. She was once the deputy head nurse in a big urban hospital, rising through the ranks over a period of two decades. She is a fervent believer who shared the gospel with many colleagues in her hospital. Having previously been overlooked for promotion because of her faith, Grace was visited by the senior officials of her hospital. They interrogated her for a whole day and pressured her colleagues to provide information on her 'religious activities'. From then on, Grace's colleagues kept their distance, afraid they might get embroiled in this seemingly serious incident. After the investigation, Grace was demoted and given non-essential duties. Her new income was a fraction of what it had been.

Grace wrestled with the injustice for 12 months, repeatedly asking God why she had suffered in this way. Her professional career was in tatters, and her hard work over many years had come to nothing. She felt lonely and betrayed. "With God's grace, the frustration and grief gradually left me," she says. "I eventually found peace when I accepted what I had always believed: that only God's work has eternal value. Everything else is temporary. It will all pass away." Please pray for our Christian sisters and brothers in China.
